

Wisconsin Without Borders (WWB) is a UW-Madison alliance and award program that recognizes globally engaged interdisciplinary scholarship and fosters excellence by providing networking and recognition opportunities. Every spring we honor individuals and their work at the WWB Award Ceremony, receiving both recognition and a small financial award.

Individuals/groups can complete the award application directly, or individuals can nominate others by completing the same online application. For more information about the process and the application form go to:

Award Categories

Service Learning Award: for faculty, academic staff, students. Focus is on a project that exemplifies the goals of service learning by highlighting 'service' or other engagement activities for students that are of value to the community, include evidence of a reciprocal relationship with the community partner, incorporate student reflection, and link the activity to formal credit / academic learning.

Community Based Research Award: for faculty, academic staff, graduate/professional students. Focus is on the collaborative enterprise between academic researchers and community members. The project should validate multiple sources of knowledge and promote multiple methods of discovery and dissemination of the knowledge produced. Projects should demonstrate a goal of social action/social change, sustainability, and be designed in collaboration with the community itself. Evidence of a reciprocal relationship with the community partner is key.

Peter Bosscher Award: for undergraduate students. Wisconsin Without Borders honors the work of Dr. Peter Bosscher, whose work and ethic of social responsibility is at the core of WWB. He was passionate about providing service-learning opportunities to undergraduates and having students reflect on the global impact of their work. It is in this context that WWB will award up to two students (individual/group) who can demonstrate, through their project submission, a commitment to service, reflection and strong community partnerships.

4W Award: for undergraduate students. This award recognizes projects that address quality life issues for women and making the world better for all, promoting excellence in areas related to gender and wellbeing, both locally and globally. Submissions must reflect evidence of 4W core principles which include a focus on 1) basic needs and human rights, 2) equality for all, 3) leadership and voice, and 4) ecological justice. Go to: sohe.wisc.edu/research-development/4w for more information on 4W.

All of the above award categories may be awarded to an individual or to a group. Only one application will be reviewed for each project, including a group submission. Submissions need to reflect work predominately completed by March 2019, or demonstrate ongoing impact.

Important Dates: Application Window: February 20 - March 12, 2018, Award Ceremony April 19, 2018.
