{ INTERVIEW } KRISHNA ELLA, BHARAT BIOTECH FOUNDER

'If India takes the nasal vaccine, other countries will also use it'

Rhythmia Kaul

NEW DELHI: Hyderabad-based Bharat Biotech's founder Krishna Ella's Ella Foundation has signed an agreement with US-based University of Wisconsin's Madison Global Health Institute to establish a One Health Centre in Bengaluru, which will develop and produce new vaccines for the country. Ella spoke to HT's Rhythmia Kaul about the need for such partnerships, and whether deaths due to India-made drugs have dented the country's reputation as the pharmacy of the world. Edited excerpts:

What is the purpose of the agreement?
We are partnering with the institute with a focus on one world, one health that people are talking about quite a bit these days.

How will it work?
...we need to work both from the veterinary and human sides, and also environmental aspects. We are trying to understand at the grassroots level, what is the strategy, what is the science that is needed to prevent all the interrelated problems in future.

The firm's intranasal vaccine has been launched. What has been the reply?
We dispatched 300,000 doses of the Covid nasal vaccine to hospitals just two days ago. A lot of countries are not taking the vaccine now, but if we are approached, we are always there to help. Some nations are approaching for the vaccine... If India takes the vaccine, then other countries will also take it.

Do you think back-to-back episodes of deaths due to India-made drugs in some countries dented its image as pharmacy of the world?
We tend to blame the country as a whole when something goes wrong which is not right. We have some very good companies, and because of some local agencies, we are getting into trouble. It is not India that is a problem. Even some of the (pharma) companies in the Western world would have gotten penalised and have quality or other issues.

What is the solution?
I feel merging state drugs regulatory authorities with the central drugs standard control organisation will help in solving the majority of this problem. That aside, I must admit, it is not really a popular opinion.
